

Maryland State Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped

Making Maryland Accessible

Parents hate seeing their child struggle to read. Many times, they turn to the schools for help. Reading teachers, expensive tutors, and long days become the norm. Still, students and parents become frustrated – sometimes destroying the love of reading for pleasure in the process. The Maryland LBPH has tools to help students regain their love of reading, all free of charge.

I use Bookshare or Learning Ally. Should I use LBPH too?

Bookshare and Learning Ally offers textbooks and classroom material that are only available through an IEP. Additionally, the National Library Service offers the following advantages over the fee-based services:

- Professionally recorded fiction and non-fiction books
- Digital books and players sent directly to the students via US Mail
- Classic, modern, and foreign language books in large print
- Classic, modern, and foreign language books in Braille
- Downloadable books and magazines
- Reading disabilities qualify with Doctor Certification
- All services, including players and materials, are FREE to students

LBPH patrons are also able to request sheet music and magazines directly from the National Library Service in either digital or Braille formats.

What Disabilities Are Considered?

Many times a student presents with a reading or learning disability that is hard to identify. For a child to be qualified for our service, they will need to be certified by an authority (Doctor, Therapist) as having a print impairment. Depending on severity, a child can qualify by having the following:

- Dyslexia
- Hyperlexia
- Aphasia
- Low Vision
- ADHD
- Reading Special Needs

What is the BARD Mobile App?

BARD, or Braille and Audio Recorded Book Download service, is a FREE mobile application that LBPH patrons can use to search and download over 90, 000 audiobooks directly to their mobile device. The book, once downloaded, stays on your child's device until deleted. Additionally, Windows 10 users can download the BARD Express App that allows BARD users to download books to their computer and transfer them to a flash drive for listening on a digital book player.
